Johann Sebastian Bach began work on his six sonatas for violin and harpsichord (BWV ) while at the courts of Weimar and Kothlen and returned to the compositions over several decades, revising and polishing until the years before his death/5(14). In this case you might say relatively straight, for Bach's sonatas for violin and keyboard, BWV , were written for a harpsichord and are generally played that way; somehow the ear is jarred more by the piano here than in Bach's solo keyboard music (which Jarrett has also recorded).7/ Six Sonatas for Violin and Piano doesn't show Jarrett's creativity but his precision. After all, composers like Bach were developing a repertoire for educational purposes.
